“These drugs (benzos) are responsible for more pain, unhappiness and damage than anything else in our society.”

~Phil Woolas MP

First, the bad news. Iboga and ibogaine have little or no efficacy against benzodiazepine addiction.

Benzo addiction is caused by impairment in the gaba receptors: while one of iboga's constituent alkaloids – the tabernanthine – antagonises the gaba receptor, the interaction is not sufficient to interrupt addiction.

No one seriously considers iboga to be an addiction interrupting solution against benzo addiction. The only way to effectively come off a benzo addiction is via tapering.

However, if you are a poly substance user which includes benzos and another substance, we can effectively interrupt the other substance, while safely managing your benzo intake to ensure you don't suffer withdrawals.

We can then design a tapering programme for you and arrange periodic reviews of your progress.
